NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
DALLAS DIVISION

The Civil Rights Volunteer Attorney Panel Program

1. What is the Civil Rights Volunteer Attorney Panel?

In 1995, the judges of the Dallas Division of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas asked the Dallas Bar Association (DBA) for assistance in finding volunteers to handle civil rights cases on a pro bono basis in federal court. Through the DBA Judiciary Committee, an informal panel of volunteers was formed. The panel has taken on numerous cases since its formation. The panel is now managed by the U.S. District Clerk's Office.

2. Where do the volunteers come from? Is there a formal application process?

Panel volunteers have come from all over the Dallas area and have a broad range of experience. Many have never handled a civil rights case before or have never had a trial in federal court. Some are sole practitioners. Others are with large firms.

While there is an application/information form modeled on the more formal Criminal Justice Act panel form, the Civil Rights panel form serves primarily as an aid in finding the right attorney for a particular case. A judge may be looking for someone with experience in a particular area (e.g., employment law) or may be looking for the second member of a team whose skills complement those of the attorney already assigned to the case. Application forms are available in the District Clerk's Office (contact Kim McGlothlin at 214/753-2152).

3. How are cases assigned?

In the past, a member of the DBA Judiciary Committee handled case assignments. Because judges are expecting assignments to increase, future assignments will be made through the court from a list kept by the District Clerk's Office. Some of the more time-consuming and complicated cases will be assigned to teams. This helps with sharing of expenses, time, and resources.

4. What types of cases are assigned?

A variety of cases are assigned by the court. All cases have been screened by a judicial officer. The cases assigned in the past two years have ranged from prisoner cases to employment discrimination cases for indigent plaintiffs. The judges have also asked for short-term help. For example, one assignment was to help a plaintiff evaluate a case before mediation and discovery.

5. How often will a case be assigned to a panel member?

Unless the panel member requests otherwise, no panel member should be called upon to handle more than two cases per year.

6. How much of a time commitment is involved? Do panel members have a say about scheduling?

The time commitment required is driven by the type of assignment given by the court. Advice in evaluating a case will take much less time than conducting discovery, responding to motions, and representing the client through a jury trial. The judges may be flexible in allowing the volunteer to move existing deadlines or to have input in establishing deadlines in the first instance.

7. What about fees and expenses?

The panel member should take a case strictly on a pro bono basis. While the civil rights statutes allow recovery of attorneys' fees to a prevailing party (and it is permissible for panel volunteers to be awarded those fees) the case should not be taken with expectation of remuneration. Rarely will a volunteer recover anything close to a reasonable hourly fee for work performed. The rewards in these cases are not monetary; rather, helping an indigent person who needs counsel, getting to know local federal judicial officers, and gaining trial experience in federal court are some of the benefits.

The court recently adopted the "Plan for the Reimbursement of Attorney Expenses in Civil Cases" ("plan"). The plan allows for reimbursement of certain expenses incurred in the preparation and presentation of a case (e.g., expenses for experts, depositions, and transcripts). According to the plan, the total amount that may be reimbursed cannot exceed $400 unless an exception is granted by the court's Non-Appropriated Fund Committee. A copy of the plan is available in the District Clerk's Office (ask for Miscellaneous Order No. 16 filed October 8, 1997).

8. What resources are available to panel members?

Materials

Seminar papers on handling civil rights cases in federal court prepared by experienced civil rights practitioners are available from Beth Hosch (214/754-0100).

Attorney Contacts

Two attorneys experienced in handling civil rights cases have agreed to help guide panel members. Susan Karamanian can be reached at 214/740-8615, and Ed Cloutman can be reached at 214/939-9222. Also, Mary Spector and Maureen Armour at the Southern Methodist University Civil Clinic are available to answer questions, particularly ones regarding discovery. They may be reached at 214/278-2562.

Court Contacts

United States Magistrate Judge Jane Boyle has been extremely active in setting up and administering the panel and is available to answer questions. She can be reached at 214/753-2393. You may also contact Karen Mitchell at 214/753-2153.

Mediators

Jerry Grissom of JAMS/Endispute has volunteered to mediate some civil rights cases. He can be reached at 214/827-7841. Free mediation by mediators-in-training is also available by calling Peter Chantilis at 214/871-5100.

Law Student Volunteers

Assistance from law students is available through Southern Methodist University's Public Service Program. You may be contacted directly by a law student who wants to volunteer, or you may call the District Clerk's Office and ask that a law student, when available, be assigned to you. If you accept assistance from a law student, you must agree to supervise the student in accordance with guidelines established for the Public Service Program. The guidelines require that you sign a Confirmation Agreement and complete a simple one page Supervisory Report form when the volunteer work is finished.

Court Reporters

A number of court reporters are willing to do pro bono work through the Texas Court Reporters' Association Pro Bono Project. Most prefer not to be used for an entire day. Dale Guedry is the contact for the Texas Court Reporters' Association Pro Bono Project. He can be reached at 972/669-4080.
